THE INNER HORIZON

A clone that isn't the mare it copies, a replicant crying in the rain, a first contact with no shared language, a time machine that won't let you return: thirteen readings that put the horizon hypothesis to the test outside the lab.

Each reading takes a work, a case or a question and looks at it with the tools from the first volume — encapsulation, entanglement, reservoir — to see what it illuminates and where it breaks down. They can be read in any order.

THE INNER HORIZON

VOLUME II: TOPOLOGICAL READINGS

ÍÑIGO BARRERA BARCELÓ

The essay's ideas in fiction, film and everyday life